

This comedy by John Cargill Thompson tells the true story of George Frederick Cooke, the 18th Century classical actor who was recurrently held to be drunk in performance and as a consequence ordered by the theatre management to apologise to his audience.

The piece was written for Gordon Rowe, the Chorley actor known for stage and television, who died in 2007 and asked Dorothy his wife to pass down the play to Dean Taylor believing he might make use of it. Do come along and see if you think he has done.

Whalley Village Hall

Sat 1st Mar 7.30 pm (bar open from 7 pm)

Tickets £6 from Whalley Post Office or Jim's Garage, 21 King Street, Whalley or at the door (subject to availability)

Information ☎ 01254 822350

www.whalleyvillagehall.org.uk